PartingWishes.com Announces Unique Service For Communicating Messages After Death

Ottawa, Ontario, October 15, 2002 – PartingWishes.com announces the latest in a portfolio of services that allow their members to communicate their parting wishes to friends and loved ones after they have passed away. The “MyMessages” service allows members to prepare multimedia messages to friends and loves ones. These messages remain completely private and only get delivered to their recipients after the member has passed away.

The MyMessages service is for those people who would like to ensure that some final messages are passed on to loved ones in the untimely event of their death. Or if they possess some important information, but don't want to rely on a sealed envelope which may either be opened prematurely, or never be discovered.

Members can write text messages, preaddressed to their intended recipients and complete with optional audio, video or graphic attachments. All of the messages are encrypted and stored on the secure PartingWishes.com server. These messages are today's equivalent of a secret sealed envelope and can be used in any number of ways: instructions to a next of kin, expressions of sentiment to a loved one, an admission of guilt for a passed transgression, or secrets revealed. The possibilities are endless.

MyMessages makes use of a unique “Member-Keyholder” model that forms the basis of the services available at PartingWishes.com. Each member designates trusted friends or family members as “Keyholders”, who are given the responsibility of unlocking the member's information at the appropriate time using their unique Keyholder password. To guard against the premature release of the messages, they are delivered to the intended recipients only after a period of time set by the member, during which time the release may be blocked by the member. Nobody else can view the messages --- not even the Keyholder, not even PartingWishes.com.

“I am very excited about this service” announced President Henry Raud. “Many people would love to have the opportunity to speak some final words to their loved ones when death is imminent The reality is that this is not always possible. For the first time, PartingWishes.com is using the power of the Internet to offer this unique and truly useful service.”

The MyMessages service is currently available free of charge at PartingWishes.com. Additional options are available for members who require extra storage space for large messages.
